PREFACE.

THIS D

This Dictionary has been undertaken to supply a want long felt by the student of a complete the same time cheap Sanskrit-English Dictionary. Very little need, I think, be said with regard to the of bringing out a work like this, when the study of Sanskrit has received such a strong impetus during twenty-five years. There have been four or five Sanskrit-English Dictionaries published till now ; but very them fulfil the two essential conditions of the popularity and usefulness of such works:—satisfying all the re- ments of students and at the same time being within their easy reach. The Dictionaries of Professors Wilson Monier Williams are very useful and valuable works, but their prices—particularly of the latter—are prohibi- high, and they do not also meet many of the most ordinary wants of Sanskrit readers. A student, while read- Sanskrit at School or College, generally expects that the Dictionary which he uses will give appropriate equivalents for such words and compound expressions as may have peculiar meanings or shades of meaning in particular pas- sages. He desires to know not only that a particular word has so many senses, but that it has this or that sense in a particular passage of a book, so that he may determine any particular meaning of a word in a certain passage by seeing and comparing how it is used elsewhere by the same writer or by other writers in different works. He also wants accurate and, as far as possible, full explanations of the more important technical terms occurring at least in his usual course of reading, as well as any other information likely to be of use to him. Professor Monier Williams has, in his invaluable Dictionary, tried to exhaust the meanings of words as far as he could, and has also given much useful information on some points. But it would not, I think, be detracting from the merits of the great work to say that it fails to give some of the most common senses of words occurring in such well-known and oft-read books as the Uttararāmacharita, Mudrārākshasa, Veṇīśambhāra, Sisupālavadhā or Kādambarī. Moreover it gives neither quotations nor references, nor much of the information likely to be useful to the student during his School or College career. In making these remarks I must not, in the slightest degree, be understood to make any reflections on that Dictionary. Indeed, I have myself derived no small help from that work, as will be acknowl- edged further on. My only object in pointing out its defects has been to show why I thought it necessary to under- take the compilation of a new Dictionary, when some already existed in the field, and I hope the reader will be able to find that this Dictionary is an improvement on its predecessors in some respects at least.

Having thus explained the necessity of undertaking and publishing this Dictionary, I shall say a few words with regard to its plan and scope. The extent of Sanskrit literature is so vast that not even the life-long labours of a single individual, howsoever talented or persevering, will be able to do full justice to it. It has two distinct branches, the Vedic and post-Vedic, each of which will require an independent encyclopædia for itself. Not even the gigantic Vāchaspatya of the late Professor Tārānātha Tarkavāchaspati, nor the equally gigantic German Wörterbuch of Drs. Roth and Bothlingk, can be said to be altogether complete and comprehensive. Much less can a small work like mine—compiled during the leisure hours of a teacher's life—as- pire to be called complete in any sense of that word. However, I have tried to make it as comprehensive and prac- tically useful to the student of Sanskrit as my humble powers enabled me to do, though how far I have succeed- ed in my object the reader alone can best decide. It includes all words occurring in the general post-Vedic literature such as Epics like the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata, the several Purāṇas, the Smṛiti literature, particularly the law- books of Manu and Yājñavalkya, the several darsanas or systems of philosophy such as Nyāya, Vaiśeṣika, Mīmāṃsā, Vedānta, &c. Grammar, Rhetoric, Poetry in all its branches, Tantra and dramatic literature, Mathematics, Medicine, Astronomy, Music, and such other technical or scientific branches of learning. It inserts most of the leading names of trees and plants with scientific or vernacular equivalents wherever noteworthy. It also gives most of the principal Vedic words or senses of words ; for though Vedic Literature would require a dictionary by itself, still I did not think it desirable to omit altogether at least such words as fre- quently occur, especially as I intended to make this work as complete and comprehensive as I could. For the same reason, obscure or unimportant words or senses of words have been inserted, though they may not be gene- rally met with in classical literature as studied by the University student.

The chief feature of this Dictionary is that it has aimed at being practical. With this view I have added quotations and references to the peculiar and noteworthy senses of words, especially such as occur in works read by the student at School or College. In some cases the quotations might appear to some to be super- fluous, but to a student, especially a beginner, they are very useful, as they supply him with apt illustrations of the senses of words, and enable him to provide himself with a large stock of choice, idiomatic expressions which are so abundant in the language. Another noticeable feature of the Dictionary is that it gives full ex- planations of the more important technical terms, particularly in Nyāya, Alankāra, Vedānta, Grammar and

turgy, wi
प्रज्ञा, उपम
In the case of the Rasagangādhara, Candrālōka and Kuvalayananda. In the explanation of dramatic terms I have usually followed the Sāhityadarapana and its translation into English, and have sometimes referred to the Dasarūpa. Similarly, striking phrases, some choice expressions and idioms or peculiar combinations of words, have been given under every word where necessary or possible; e. g. see the words गम्, सेतु, मयूर, हस्त, धा, कृ, दा, चं, &c. Mythological allusions in the case of all important personages have been briefly but clearly explained, so as to give the reader most of the facts connected with them; e. g. see अग्नि, अगस्त्य, इंद्र, कार्तिकेय, वृहद्, सावित्री, &c. Etymology has generally been given in the case of every important word, except where it was purely fanciful; e. g. see अजीवनि, अतिथि, अपत्य, पुत्र, जाया, हृषीकेश &c. In doing this I have followed the system of native grammarians who resolve every word into its 'prakṛiti' and 'pratyaya', and the terminations given according to Pāṇini's nomenclature will be explained further on. I have thought it necessary to do so at the suggestion of several friends, and have derived considerable help from the great Vāchaspatya which I have usually followed, except where the etymology given therein appeared to me to be purely arbitrary or fanciful. Philological comparisons have been given only where useful and noteworthy. The work also gives information about words which, it is believed, will be very useful, especially to the University student; e. g. see the words अप्सरस्, अक्षर, वेद, मंडल, मानस, ईस &c. Some of the most common Nyāyas or Maxims have been collected under the word न्याय for easy reference; e. g. see काकतालीयन्याय, दंडाग्रन्याय, स्थालीयुल्लङ्घन्याय &c. To add to the usefulness of the Dictionary I have added at the end three Appendices. The first is on Sanskrit Prosody which attempts to give in a clear and intelligible form all the common metres with Definitions, Schemes in Gaṇas and Examples. In the preparation of this Appendix I have chiefly drawn upon the two popular works on Prosody, the Vṛttaratnākara and Chhandaḥ Manjari, but some common metres omitted in those works have been added from the illustrations found in the works of Māgha, Bhāravi, Daṇḍin, Bhaṭṭi, Sūdraka, &c. Colebrooke's Essay on Sanskrit Metres has also given me occasional help. The second Appendix gives the dates, writings, &c. of some of the important Sanskrit writers such as Kālidāsa, Bhavabhūti, Bāṇa. Here I have selected only those names about which something definite—something more than mere guesses and surmises—is known, and I have derived some hints from the Introduction to Vallabhadeva's Subhāshitāvali edited by Dr. Peterson and Pandit Durgā Prasāda, and from Prof. Max Müller's 'India: what it can teach us,' for which my thanks are due to the authors of both the works. The third Appendix gives the most important names in the ancient Geography of India with identifications on the modern map wherever ascertained, and in this part of the work I have to cordially acknowledge the help I have derived from Cunningham's Ancient Geography, but particularly from Mr. Borooah's Essay prefixed to the third volume of his English-Sanskrit Dictionary. I had at first intended to add two alphabetical indexes of the principal events and personages occurring in the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata, but I have had to abandon the project, as the publication of the Dictionary has already been delayed on account of various causes over which I had no control. In short, I have endeavoured to make the PRACTICAL SANSKRIT ENGLISH DICTIONARY as complete, comprehensive, and encyclopedic as was possible within the limits of a single compact volume by condensing a very large amount of matter by means of suitable typographical and other arrangements, and I hope it will be found to be a practically useful and reliable guide in the study of the Sanskrit language.

There is one point which will not fail to strike a careful reader of this Dictionary, which is that there is not the same fulness of treatment in the later portion as in the first 300 or 400 pages. After the vowels had been printed off, I found that they covered no less than 364 pages by themselves, and if the remaining letters of the alphabet had been treated with the same fulness, the volume would have increased to about 2000 pages, and the publication of the work itself would have been delayed by at least one year more. It is obvious that neither the price at which the work was offered to subscribers, nor the very cheap price at which the work was offered to subscribers, would have enabled me to carry on the work of compilation on the same scale; and I was, therefore, obliged to endeavour to curtail the matter by occasional substituting references for quotations without at the same time marring the usefulness of the work, and by abridging explanations of words and the information given about them, while in some cases I have had to keep the matter originally intended for the volume. I hope, however, that this has not to any great extent affected the practical usefulness of the Dictionary, and I trust that if time and circumstances permit, I shall be in a position to make the second edition much more useful, complete, and comprehensive than the first.

The plan and arrangement of the work will be best understood from the 'Directions' which follow. Verbs formed by prefixing prepositions to roots are arranged in the alphabetical order of the prepositions so affixed; e. g. प्रस्था or संस्था must be looked for not under स्था, but its own alphabetical order, and at the head of its own group of derivatives. This system has been followed in this Dictionary with a view to save repetition of equivalents under the derivatives from a root. But if, on trial, it be found to be practically inconvenient, it may be abandoned.

the second edition. As in the English-Sanskrit Dictionary, I have here throughout the nasals, (e. g. anga or santāpa is written not as अङ्ग, सन्ताप, but as अंग, संताप), which said with regard to its correctness, is very convenient for purposes of printing. The effect saving in space will be understood by the reader after very short practice.

It now remains for me to do the grateful duty of acknowledging the help I have derived from different sources. And in doing so I must give the first place to the great Sanskrit encyclopædia, the Vāchaspatya of Professor Tārānātha Tarkavāchaspati. I have constantly kept it by my side and have freely availed myself of the information contained in it—of course with large curtailments—though I have had to supplement it myself wherever it was found to be defective or insufficient. Several words and senses of words not given in the existing Sanskrit-English lexicons, as also some quotations, particularly from Udbhaṭa and Purāṇas, have been borrowed from the same work. The Sanskrit-English Dictionary of Professor Monier Williams is the next work to which I have been greatly indebted. It has been a constant source of help to me, and I have frequently adopted his renderings of words, compound expressions, &c., where I found them better than those I myself had to suggest. And though there is a good deal in this Dictionary that is not to be found in that work, and though the plan and scope of the two are essentially different, yet I must gratefully acknowledge the great assistance I have often derived from the learned Professor's invaluable Dictionary. The last work to which also my grateful acknowledgments are due is the German Wörterbuch of Drs. Roth and Bothlingk. The chief distinct feature of that great work is that it abounds with quotations and references dealing with almost every branch of Sanskrit literature, but a careful reader will easily see that the works belonging to Vedic literature, such as the four Vedas, Upanishads, Brāhmaṇas, Āranyakas, &c., have been comparatively more copiously drawn upon by the authors than works belonging to the post-Vedic literature. A glance at the contents of this Dictionary will show that I have drawn upon works seldom or not at all referred to in the Wörterbuch; such as the Mahāvīracharita, Mālati-Mādhava, Uttararāmācharita, Kādambarī, Sisupālavadha, Kirātārjuniya, Mudrārākshasa, Veṇisambhāra, Ratnāvali, Kāvyaaprakāśa, Sāṅkarabhāṣya, Bhāminīvilāsa, Vikramāṅkadevacharita, Gangālaharī, &c. Indeed, the great majority of quotations and references are from my own collection made during the last seven or eight years; and I have even been obliged to keep back a large number of them for want of space. But I must frankly acknowledge that I have freely availed myself of the quotations and references in that Dictionary, where my own collection was defective, particularly in the case of Vedic and Paurāṇic works. I have also occasionally consulted the Dictionaries of H. H. Wilson and Benfey, the former supplying some happy renderings of technical or obscure words. To these authors, as well as to the authors and editors of several other works, which are too many to be here mentioned, from which I have derived occasional help in one form or another, my most grateful thanks are due.

In conclusion I may be permitted to express the hope that the PRACTICAL SANSKRIT-ENGLISH DICTIONARY—which has attempted to give in 1200 closely printed pages of this size matter at least equal in point of quantity to that given by Prof. Monier Williams in his Dictionary, but in point of quality more reliable, varied, and practically useful, in my humble opinion—will serve the purpose I have had in view in compiling it; namely, to render to the student of Sanskrit nearly the same service that Webster's or Ogilvie's Dictionary does to the student of English. I have tried to make it easily accessible to the public by issuing a Popular Edition priced at 7 Rupees—price too low, I believe, for so much matter; while the Library Edition which, containing the same matter, is printed on superior paper and in better style, and will also have superior binding, will best answer the purposes of the well-to-do persons who can afford to spend 10 or 11 Rupees for such object. In a work of this kind I know there must be several defects and also errors both of omission and commission, and if such persons as will do me the honour of using this Dictionary will be so good as to point out to me places which require corrections, additions or improvements, I shall be very happy to give the suggestions my best consideration in the second edition. But if the Dictionary, even in its present form, be found to be a useful publication, I shall consider my labours more than amply repaid, and shall feel quite refreshed to devote my humble self again, if need be, to the service of the Sanskrit-reading public; for, says the poet, केशः फलेन हि पुनर्नवतां विधत्ते.

DIRECTIONS TO BE STUDIED BEFORE USING THIS D

1. (nominative, in the of the itive bi

1. Words and their derivatives are arranged in the following order : first the radical in large black type in all its different parts of speech ; and then the several derivatives in smaller cases these derivatives are given in their own alphabetical order for the sake of clearness.

2. The different parts of speech of a word are indicated by large black dashes. The nominative singular of the part of speech is usually given, or the letters m., f., n. or ind. as ādḥava (Bombay) leading word being given only once. Where a word is used as an adjective and also as a noun, the adjective is invariably given first ; e. g. वीर, साधु, सत्. The same is done in the āpanishad, Purāṇa, Rombay ).

3. Where two words, though identical in form, differ entirely in meaning, they are given as separate words ; e. g. हा, हि. In a few cases they have been grouped together.

4. Words which are used as adverbs, but derived by case-inflections from a noun or adjective, are given under the noun or adjective ; e. g. उत्तरेण under उत्तर. In some cases they are given within brackets in compounds, if any.

5. The several meanings of a word, where they can be sufficiently distinguished from one another, are given separately and marked by black Arabic figures. Mere shades of meaning are not considered as separate senses, but in such cases several synonyms are given under the same meaning, from which the reader will be able to make his choice. Where the shades of meaning are sufficiently broad, they are numbered as separate meanings.

6. The meanings of words are arranged in the order of their importance and frequency of use. It has, of course, been possible to do so in every case, but the system has been generally followed.

7. (a) Compounds are grouped under the first word in the compounds, in the alphabetical order of the second members, the black dash before them denoting that first word ; e. g. —होत्र under अग्नि means अग्निहोत्र—अधिकारिन् under उत्तर means उत्तराधिकारिन्.

N. B. In giving compounds, the changes which the final letters undergo, e. g. the dropping, assimilation of letters &c. are assumed ; e. g. —अपर under पूर्व stands for पूर्वापर, —गतिः under अधस्, for अधोगतिः &c. In some cases the compound words, where not easily intelligible, are given in full within brackets ; see घटस्, पुनस्, वाचस्, &c.

(b) Where a compound itself is used as the first member of other compounds, these latter are given immediately after, their second member being preceded by ° which represents the first compound ; e. g. °इन्द्र, °राज &c. given under द्वि stand not for द्विन्द्र or द्विराज, but for द्विजेंद्र or द्विजराज.

(c) All aluk compounds ( e. g. आत्मनेपद्, कुशेशय, परस्मैपद्, मनसिज, दास्याःपुत्रः, हृदिस्थस् &c. ) are given separately in their proper places, but under the radical word.

8. All words formed by Kṛit or Taddhita affixes are given separately ; thus कूलंक्ष, भयंकर, अज्ञमय, प्रातस्तन हिमवत् &c. will be found not as compounds under कूल, भय &c. but as separate words.

9. (a) In the case of substantives the nominative singular, wherever it may at once denote the gender, is given throughout, the visarga, unless followed by f., indicating masculine gender, and the anusvāra neuter gender. Where the nominative singular is not indicative of the gender, it is specified as m., f. or n. as the case may be. All substantives ending in consonants have their genders specified as m., f. or n.

(b) The feminine forms of nouns are usually given as separate leading words, but in some cases, especially in the first five or six hundred pages, they are given under the leading words after the masculine gender. But where the fem. base enters into compounds, it is invariably given separately ; e. g. अजा.

10. In the case of adjectives the simple base only is given. The feminine of the majority of adjectives ends in ā, and adjectives ending in ī or u have generally the same base for all genders. In all such cases the simple base is given, the feminine being formed according to similar substantive bases. All irregular forms are, however, denoted within brackets. Adjectives ending in त्, श् or स् form their feminines regularly ; where irregular, they are denoted within brackets.

a) In the case of verbs, the figure before P., A. and U. denotes the conjugation to which they belong; P. denoting Parasmaipada, Atmanepada, and U. Ubhayapada ( P. and A. ). Den. stands for Denominative and here the 3rd pers. sing. present tense is given throughout.

Under each root the 3rd person singular Present tense and of the Perfect, Aorist, two Futures and the Infinitive of important roots, and past passive participle wherever noteworthy, are given throughout. Passive, Causal and Desiderative, wherever noteworthy, are given after them, or after the senses in which the root is used, where there is any peculiarity in their senses.

Derivatives formed by prefixing prepositions to roots are given separately in their own alphabetical order. Words which are no derivatives from such verbs.

Verbs which change their forms or pada ( voice ) or both, when used in particular senses or in particular prepositions. Such changes are denoted within brackets.

Verbs which belong to different conjugations with different meanings, Roman figures are used to denote them, ( cf. अस्, युष्, हा &c. ), the root being repeated only once.

All possible derivatives from a word are not always given when they may be easily supplied, as in the case of potential passive participles ( formed by तव्य, अनीय and य ), present participles, and nouns from adjectives ( formed by adding ता, त्व or य ). Where there is any peculiarity either in the form or meaning of these derivatives, they are given. But in many cases the student will have to supply the missing parts according to the general rules given in Grammar.

b) Similarly, the equivalents given under the radical word are not always repeated under the derivatives; they may, if necessary, be ascertained by a reference to the radical word.

13. Mythological allusions are explained in small type in the body of the work between rectangular brackets. Here long vowels like â, î, û, and letters of the lingual class, as also ऋ and ॠ are, for the convenience of reference, denoted by corresponding italic letters; e. g. Pandava and Kripî stand for पांडव and कृपि.

14. Metres and information about literary and geographical names are given in the Appendices at the end.

THE PRACTICAL SANSKRIT-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

अ

अ

अंशः

अ The first letter of the Nāgarī Alphabet.—अः [अवति, अतति सात-न तिष्ठतीति वा; अद्-अत् वा, ड Tv. ] 1 N. of Vishnu, the first of the three sounds constituting the sacred syllable ओम्; अकारो विष्णुर्दृष्ट उकार-तु महेश्वरः । मकारस्तु स्मृतो ब्रह्मा प्रणवस्तु त्रयात्मकः ॥ ; for more explanation of the three syllables अ, उ, म् see ओम्. 2 N. of Siva, Brahmā, Vāyu, or Vais-ānara.—ind. 1 A prefix corresponding to Latin in, Eng. in or un, Gr. a or an, and joined to nouns, adjectives, and declinables (or even to verbs) as substitute for the negative particle नञ्, and changed to अन् before vowels except in the word अ-अणिन्. The senses of न usually enumerated are six—(a) सादृश्य 'likeness' or 'resemblance'; अत्राद्भगः one like a Brahman (wearing the sacred thread &c.), but not a Brāhmaṇa, but a śhatriya, or Vaisya; अनिष्ठः a reed appearing like इष्ठ, but not a true इष्ठ. (b) अभाव 'absence', 'negation', 'want', 'privation'; अज्ञानं absence of knowledge, ignorance; अक्रोधः, अनंगः, अकंटकः, अघटः &c. (c) भेद 'difference' or 'distinction'; अपटः not a cloth, something different from, or other than, a cloth. (d) अल्पता 'smallness', 'diminution', used as a diminutive particle; अनुद्रा having a slender waist (कुशोदरी or तनुमध्यमा). (e) पाशस्त्व 'badness', 'unfitness', 'having a depreciative sense'; अकालः wrong or improper time; अकार्यं not to be done, improper, unworthy, bad act. (f) विरोध 'opposition', 'contrariety'; अनीतिः the opposite of morality, immorality; असित not white, black; असुर not a god, a demon &c. These senses are put together in the following verse:—
सादृश्यमभावश्च तदन्यत्वं तदल्पता । अ-
शस्त्वं विरोधश्च नञर्थः षट् प्रकीर्तितः ॥
See also. With verbal derivatives, such as gerunds, infinitives, participles, it has usually the sense of 'not'; अदग्धवा not having burnt; अपश्यन् not seeing; so असकृत् not once; अमुषा, अकस्मात् &c. Sometimes अ does not affect the sense of the second member; अपश्चिम that which has no last, i. e. last; अदुत्तम having no superior, unsurpassed, most excellent; for examples see the words.—2 An interjection of (a) Pity (ah!) अ अवचं P. I. 1. 14 Sk. (b) Reproach, censure (fie, shame); अपचसि त्वं जालम् P. VI. 3. 73 Vārt. See अकरणि, अजीवनि also. (c) Used in addressing; अ अनन्त. (d) It is also used as a particle of prohibition.—3 The augment prefixed to the root in the formation of the Imperfect, Aorist and Conditional Tenses.

N. B.—The application of this privative prefix is practically unlimited; to give every possible case would almost amount to a dictionary itself. No attempt will, therefore, be made to give every possible combination of this prefix with a following word; only such words as require a special explanation, or such as most frequently occur in the literature and enter into compounds with other words, will be given; others will be found self-explaining when the English 'in,' 'un,' or 'not,' is substituted for अ or अन् before the meaning of the second word, or the sense may be expressed by 'less,' 'free from,' 'devoid or destitute of' &c.; अकथ्य unspeakable; अदर्प without pride, or freedom from pride; अग्रगल्भ not bold; अमग unfortunate; अवित्त destitute of wealth &c. &c. In many cases such compounds will be found explained under the second member. Most compounds beginning with अ or अन् are either Tatpuruṣa or Bahuvrīhi (to be determined by the sense) and should be so dissolved.

[The sage Agastya is a very reputed personage in Hindu mythology. In the Rig-veda he and Vasishtha are said to be the off-spring of Mitra and Varuna, whose seed fell from them at the sight of the lovely nymph Urvashi at a sacrificial session. Part of the seed fell into a jar and part into water; from the former arose Agastya who is, therefore, called Kumbharyoni, Kumbhajanman, Ghatodbhava, Kalasayoni &c.: from the latter Vasishtha. From his parentage Agastya is also called Maitravaruni, Aurva-Seya, and, as he was very small when he was born, he is also called Manya. He is represented to have humbled the Vindhya mountains by making them prostrate themselves before him when they tried to rise higher and higher till they well-nigh occupied the sun's disc and obstructed his path, See Vindhya. (This fable is supposed by some to typify the progress of the Aryas towards the south in their conquest and civilization of India, the humbling of the mountain standing metaphorically for the removal of physical obstacles in their way.) He is also known by the names of Pītābdi, Samudra-chuluka &c., from another fable according to which he drank up the ocean because it had offended him and because he wished to help Indra and the gods in their wars with a class of demons called Kaleyas who had hid themselves in the waters and oppressed the three worlds in various ways. His wife was Lopamudra. She was also called Kausitaki and Varaprada. She bore him two sons, Dridhasya and Dridhasyu. In the Ramayana Agastya plays a distinguished part. He dwelt in a hermitage on mount Kunjara to the south of the Vindhya and was chief of the hermits of the south. He kept under control the evil spirits who infested the south and a legend relates how he once ate up a Rakshasa named Vatapi, who had assumed the form of a ram, and destroyed by a flash of his eye the Rakshasa's brother who attempted to avenge him. In the course of his wanderings Rāma with his wife and brother came to the hermitage of Agastya who received him with the greatest kindness and became his friend, adviser and protector. He gave Rāma the bow of Vishnu and accompanied him to Ayodhya when he was restored to his kingdom after his exile of 14 years. The superhuman power which the sage possessed is also represented by another legend, according to which he turned king Nahusha into a serpent and afterwards restored him to his proper form. In the south he is usually regarded as the first teacher of science and literature to the primitive Dravidian tribes, and his era is placed by Dr. Caldwell in the 7th or 6th century B. C. The Puranas represent Agastya as the son of Pulastya (the sage from whom the Rakshasas sprang) and Havirbhuvā the daughter of Kardama. Several 'hymn-seers' are mentioned in his family, such as his two sons, Indrabahu, Mayobhuvā and Mahendra, also others who served to perpetuate the family. The sage is represented as a great philosopher, benevolent and kind-hearted, unsurpassed in the science of archery and to have taken a principal part in the colonization of the south; निर्जितासि मया भद्रे शत्रुहस्ता-दमर्षिणा । अगस्त्येन दुराधर्षा मुनिना दक्षिणेव दिक् ॥ Rām.; अगस्त्याचारितामाज्ञां R. 4. 44; cf. also: अगस्त्यो दक्षिणमाशामाश्रित्य नमसि स्थितः । वरुणस्यात्मजो योगी विध्यवाताभिर्मर्दनः ॥ and R. 6. 61, Mv. 7. 14.]

In Dvandva Comp. as first member with names of deities, and with particular words अग्नि is changed to अग्ना, as विष्णु, मरुतौ, or to अग्नी, पर्जन्यौ, वरुणौ, पोमौ [cf. L. ignis.] [Agni is the god of Fire, the Ignis of the Latins and Ogni of the Slavonians. He is one of the most prominent deities of the Rigveda. He is an immortal, has taken up his abode among mortals as their guest; he is the domestic priest, the successful accomplisher and protector of all ceremonies; he is also the religious leader and preceptor of the gods, a swift messenger employed to announce to the immortals the hymns and to convey to them the oblations of their worshippers, and to bring them down from the sky to the place of sacrifice. He is sometimes regarded as the mouth and the tongue through which both gods and men participate in the sacrifices. He is the lord, protector and leader of people, monarch of men, the lord of the house, friendly to mankind, and like a father, mother, brother &c. He is represented as being produced by the attrition of two pieces of fuel which are regarded as husband and wife. Sometimes he is considered to have been brought down from heaven or generated by Indra between two clouds or stones, created by Dyau, or fashioned by the gods collectively. In some passages he is represented as having a triple existence, which may mean his three-fold manifestations as the sun in heaven, lightning in the atmosphere, and as ordinary fire on the earth, although the three appearances are also elsewhere otherwise explained. His epithets are numberless and for the most part descriptive of his physical characteristics: धूमकेतु, हुतशुद्ध, शुचि, रोहिताश्व, सनाजिह्व, तोमरधर, घृताक्ष, चित्रमातु, ऊर्ध्वशोचिभू, शोचिष्केश, हरिकेश, हिरण्यदंत, अयोदध् &c. In a celebrated passage he is said to have 4 horns, 3 feet, 2 heads, and 7 hands. The highest divine functions are ascribed to Agni. He is said to have spread out the two worlds and produced them, to have supported heaven, formed the mundane regions and luminaries of heaven, to have begotten Mitra and caused the sun to ascend the sky. He is the head and summit of the sky, the centre of the earth. Earth, Heaven and all beings obey his commands. He knows and sees all worlds or creatures and witnesses all their actions. The worshippers of Agni prosper, they are wealthy and live long. He is the protector of that man who takes care to bring him fuel. He gives him riches and no one can overcome him who sacrifices to this god. He confers, and is the guardian of, immortality. He is like a water-trough in a desert and all blessings issue from him. He is therefore constantly supplicated for all kinds of boons, riches, food, deliverance from enemies and demons, poverty, reproach, childlessness, hunger &c. Agni is also associated with Indra in different hymns and the two gods are said to be twin brothers.

Such is the Vedic conception of Agni; but in the course of mythological personifications he appears as the eldest son of Brahma and is called Abhimani [ Vishnu Purana ]. His wife was Svaha; by her he had 3 sons—Pavaka, Pavamana and Suchi; and these had forty-five sons: altogether 49 persons who are considered identical with the 49 fires. He is also represented as a son of Angiras, as a king of the Pitris or Manes, as a Marut and as a grandson of Sandila, and also as a star. The Harivamsa describes him as clothed in black, having smoke for his standard and head-piece and carrying a flaming javelin. He is borne in a chariot drawn by red horses and the 7 winds are the wheels of his car. He is accompanied by a ram and sometimes he is represented as riding on that animal. Agni was appointed by Brahma as the sovereign of the quarter between the south and east, whence the direction is still known as Agneyi. The Mahabharata represents Agni as having exhausted his vigour and become dull by devouring many oblations at the several sacrifices made by king Svetaki, but he recruited his strength by devouring the whole Khandava forest; for the story see the word खाड्य ]. When, after the abduction of Sita by Ravana, Rama sent monkeys in all quarters to search for her, Angada was made chief of a monkey-troop proceeding to the south. For one month he got no information, and when consequently he determined to cast off his life, he was told by Sampati that Sita could be found in Lanka. He sent Maruti to the island and, on the latter's return with definite information, they joined Rama at Kishkindhā. Afterwards when the whole host of Rama went to Lanka Angada was despatched to Ravana as a messenger of peace to give him a chance of saving himself in time. Br. अंगिरस् is from अंगार ; ये अंगारा आसंस्तंगिरसोऽभवन् ; so Nir. ; अंगारं यो बभूव सौंगितः ] N. of a celebrated sage to whom many hymns of the Rigveda are ascribed. ( Etymologically Angiras is connected with the word Agni and is often regarded as its synonym. ) ( शिवो भव प्रजापत्यो मानुषीम्यस्त्वमंगिरः ; अंगिरोभिः ऋषिभिः संपादितत्वात् अंगसी-ष्टवाद्वा अंगिरा अंगिरूपः ). According to Bhārata he was a son of Agni. When Agni began to practise penance, Angiras himself became Agni and surpassed him in power and lustre, seeing which Agni came to the sage and said :—निक्षिपाम्यहमग्निं त्वमग्निः प्रथमो भव । भविष्यामि द्वितीयोहं प्राजापत्यक एव च ॥ Angiras said: कुरु पुण्यं प्रजासर्गं भवाग्निमिति रापहः । मां च देव कुरुष्वाम्रे प्रथमं पुनर्नजसा ॥ तद्वत्वांगिरसो वाक्यं जातवेदास्तथा-करोत्. He was one of the 10 mind-born sons of Brahman. His wife was Sraddhā, daughter of Kardama and bore him 3 sons, Brihaspati, Uta-thiya and Samvarta, and 4 daughters Kuhu, Sinivali, Raka and Anumati. The Matsya Purana says that Angiras was one of the three sages produced from the sacrifice of Varuna and that he was adopted by Agni as his son and acted for some time as his regent. Another account, however, makes him father of Agni. He was one of the seven great sages and also one of the 10 Prajapatis or progenitors of mankind. In latter times Angiras was one of the inspired lawgivers, and also a writer on Astronomy. As an astronomical personification he is Brihaspati, regent of Jupiter or Jupiter itself. He is also regarded as the priest of the gods and the lord of sacrifices. Besides Sraddhā his wives were Smṛiti, two daughters of Maitreya, some daughters of Daksha, Svadhā and Sati. He is also regarded as a teacher of the Brahmanvidya. The Vedic hymns are also said to be his daughters. According to the Bhagavata Purana, Angiras begot sons possessing Brahmanical glory on the wife of Rathitara, a Kshatriya who was childless and these persons were afterwards called descendants of Angiras. The principal authors of vedic hymns in the family of Angiras were 33. His family has three distinct branches केवलंगिरस, गौतमांगिरस and भारद्वाजांगिरस, each branch having a number of subdivisions.—( pl. ) 1 Descendants of Angiras, [ Angiras being father of Agni they are considered as descendants of Agni himself who is called the first of the Angirases. Like Angiras they occur in hymns addressed to luminous objects, and at a later period they became for the most part personifications of light, of luminous bodies, of divisions of time, celestial phenomena and fires adapted to peculiar occasions, as the full moon and change of the moon, or to particular rites, as the अश्वमेध, राजसूय &c. ]—2 Hymns of the Atharvaveda. —3 Priests, who, by using magical formulas of the Atharvaveda, protect the sacrifice against the effects of inauspicious accidents.

[ He appears in the Vedas in hymns addressed to Agni, Indra, the Asvins and the Visvedevas. In the Sṛayam-bhūva Manvantara he appears as one of the ten Prajapatis or mind-born sons of Brahma, being born from his eye. These sons having died by the curse of Siva, Brahma performed a sacrifice, at the beginning of the present Vaivasvata Manvantara, and Atri was born from the flames of Agni. Anasūya was his wife in both lives. In the first she bore him three sons, Datta, Durvasas and Soma; in the second she had two additional children, a son by name Aryaman and a daughter called Amala. In the Rāmāyana an account is given of the visit paid by Rama and Sita to Atri and Anasūya in their hermitage, when they both received them most kindly; See Anasūya. As a Rishi or sage he is one of the seven sages who were all sons of Brahma, and represents in Astronomy one of the stars of the Great Bear situated in the north. He is also the author of a code of laws known as अत्रिस्मृति or अत्रिंसंहिता. In the Purāṇas he is said to have produced the moon from his eye, while he was practising austere penance, the moon being in consequence called अत्रिज, जात, दृगज, अत्रिनेत्र-प्रसूत, प्रभव, भव &c. cf. also अथ नयन-समुत्पत्त्युत्पत्तिरत्रैव खीः R. 2. 75 and अत्रि-वंदुः V. 5. 21. ]—( pl. ) descendants of Atri.

In the R̥gveda Aditi is frequently implored 'for blessings on children and cattle, for protection and for forgiveness'. She is called 'Devamata' being strangely enough represented both as mother and daughter of Daksha. She had 8 sons, she approached the gods with 7 and cast away the 8th (Martanda, the sun.) [In another place Aditi is addressed as 'supporter of the sky, sustainer of the earth, sovereign of this world, wife of Vishnu', but in the Mahabharata, Ramayana and Puranas, Vishnu is said to be the son of Aditi, one of the several daughters of Daksha and given in marriage to Kasyapa by whom she was mother of Vishnu in his dwarf incarnation, and also of Indra, and she is called mother of gods and the gods her sons, 'aditinandanans'; See Daksha and Kasyapa also]. —Comp.—अदितेन्द्रः a god, divine being.

[She was very pious and given to austere devotion by virtue of which she had obtained miraculous powers. Several stories are told to illustrate them. When the earth was devastated by a terrible drought which lasted for 10 years, Anasūyā created water, fruits, roots &c. by means of her ascetic powers and saved many lives. On one occasion when the sage Māṇḍavya was about to be impaled, the wife of a sage happened to touch the stake as she passed by, whereupon Māṇḍavya cursed her that she would become a widow at sunrise. She, however, prevented the sun from rising, and all actions of men being consequently stopped, the gods, sages &c. went to Anasūyā, her friend, who, by the force of her penance, made the sun rise without, at the same time, bringing widowhood on her friend. Another legend is also told in which Anasūyā changed Brahmā, Vishnu and Mahesa into infants, when, at the instigation of their wives, they attempted to test her chastity, but restored them to their former shapes at the importunities of their humbled consorts. She is also said to have caused the three-streamed Ganges to flow down on the earth near the hermitage of her husband for the ablutions of sages; see R. 13. 51. In the Ramayana she is represented as having been very kind and attentive to Sītā whom she favoured with sound motherly advice on the virtues of chastity, and at the time of her departure gave her an unguent (See R. 12. 27, 14. 14) which was to keep her beautiful for ever and to guard her person from the attempts of rapacious beasts, demons &c. She was the mother of the irascible sage Durvāsa.

( In Nyāya ) Statement of the constant and invariable concomitance of the हेतु ( middle term ) and the साध्य

( major term ) of an Indian syllogism ( हेतुसाध्यबोध्यनिरन्वयः ). In the familiar instance पर्येतो वह्निमान् धूमवन्वात् the relation यत्र यत्र धूमस्तत्र तत्र वह्निः ( wherever there is smoke there is fire ) is called अन्वय or अन्वयव्याप्ति. अन्वय, in fact, corresponds to the universal A proposition of European logic ' All A is B. ' The ' व्यतिरेकव्याप्ति ' means an assertion of the concomitance of the absence of साध्य and the absence of हेतु ( तद-भावयोः हेत्वभावसाध्याभावयोः व्याप्तिः ) and corresponds to the converted A proposition ' All not-B is not-A ' ; or in Sanskrit यत्र यत्र वह्निर्नास्ति तत्र तत्र धूमोपि नास्ति ; and a cause or हेतु is said to be connected with its effect by अन्वयव्यति- रेकव्याप्ति when both the affirmative and negative relations between the thing to be proved and the cause that proves can be equally asserted ; such a Hetu alone makes the argument perfectly sound and incapable of refutation. This process of arriving at the Vyāpti or universal proposition corresponds to the methods of Agreement and Difference in Mill's
Logic ; साध्ये निश्चितमन्वयेन वदितं Mu.

अभिमन्थ = अधिमन्थ q. v.

अभिमन्युः N. of a son of Subhadrâ, sister of Balarâma; also the metronymic Saubhadra. He was called Abhimanyu because at his very birth he appeared to be long-armed and very fiery (आद्यमन्युस्य). When the Kaurava army the advice of Drona formed a peculiar battle-array called 'Vyuha,' hoping that, as Arjuna was away, none of the Pandavas would be able to break through it. Abhimanyu assured his uncles that he was ready to try, if they only encouraged him. He accordingly entered the Vyuha, killed many warriors on the Kaurava side, and was slain by more than a match even for veteran and elderly heroes as Drona, (Karna, Duryodhana &c. He could not, however, hold out long against fearful odds, and was at last overpowered and slain. He was very handsome. He had two wives, Vatala daughter of Balarama and Uttara daughter of the king of Virata. Uttara was pregnant when he was slain and gave birth to a son named Parishita who succeeded to the throne of Hastinapura].

[Arjuna was so called because he was 'white' or 'pure in actions' (पृथिव्यां चतुरेतायो वर्णो मे दुर्लभः समः । करोमि कर्म शुद्धं च त्वं मामर्जुनं विदुः). He was taught the use of arms by Drona and was his favourite pupil. By his skill in arms he won Draupadi at her Svayamvara (see Draupadi). For an involuntary transgression he went into temporary exile and during that time he learnt the science of arms from Parasurama. He married Ulupi, a Naga Princess, by whom he had a son named Iravat, and also Chitrangada, daughter of the king of Manipura, who bore him a son named Babhravahana. During this exile he visited Dvaraka, and with the help and advice of Krishna succeeded in marrying Subhadra. By her he had a son named Abhimanyu. Afterwards he obtained the bow Gandiva from the god Agni whom he assisted in burning the Khandava forest. When Dharma, his eldest brother, lost the kingdom by gambling, and the five brothers went into exile, he went to the Himalayas to propitiate the gods and to obtain from them celestial weapons for use in the contemplated war against the Kauravas. There he fought with Siva who appeared in the disguise of a Kirata; but when he discovered the true character of his adversary he worshipped him and Siva gave him the Pasupatastra. Indra, Varuna, Yama and Kubera also presented him with their own weapons. In the 13th year of their exile, the Pandavas entered the service of the King of Virata and he had to act the part of a eunuch, and music and dancing master. In the great war with the Kauravas Arjuna took a very distinguished part. He secured the assistance of Krishna who acted as his charioteer and related to him the Bhagavadgita when on the first day of the battle he hesitated to bend his bow against his own kinsmen. In the course of the great struggle he slew or vanquished several redoubtable warriors on the side of the Kauravas, such as Jayadratha, Bhishma, Karna &c. After Yudhishthira had been installed sovereign of Hastinapura, he resolved to perform the Asvamedha sacrifice, and a horse was let loose with Arjuna as its guardian. Arjuna followed it through many cities and countries and fought with many kings. At the city of Manipura he had to fight with his own son Babhravahana and was killed; but he was restored to life by a charm supplied by his wife Ulupi. He traversed the whole of Bharata khanda and returned to Hastinapura, loaded with spoils and tributes, and the great horse-sacrifice was then duly performed. He was afterwards called by Krishna to Dvaraka amid the intestine struggles of the Yadavas and there he performed the funeral ceremonies of Vasudeva and Krishna. Soon after this the five Pandavas repaired to heaven having installed Parikshit—the only surviving son of Abhimanyu—on the throne of Hastinapura. Arjuna was the bravest of the Pandavas, high-minded, generous, upright, handsome and the most prominent figure of all his brothers. He has several appellations, such as Partha, Gudakesa, Savyasachi, Dhananjaya, Phalguna, Kirita, Jishnu, Svetavahana, Gandivin &c. ] -6 N. of Kārtavīrya, slain by Parasurama. Indrāni. [ Indra, the god of firmament, is the Jupiter Planet

the Indian Aryans. In the Vedas

is placed in the first rank among gods ; yet he is not regarded as uncreated being, being distinguished spoken of in various passages of the Vedas as being born, and as having a father and a mother. He is sometimes represented as having been produced by the gods as a destroyer of enemies, as the son of Ekashata

and in Rv. 10. 90. 13 he is said to have sprung from the mouth of Purusha. He is of a ruddy or golden colour, and can assume any form at will. He rides in a bright chariot drawn by two tawny horses.

His most famous weapon is the thunderbolt which he uses with deadly effect in his warfare with demons of darkness, drought and clement weather, variously called

Ahi, Vritra, Sambara, Namuchi &c.

He storms and breaks through their castles, and sends down fertilizing showers of rain to the great delight of his worshippers. He is thus the lord of the atmosphere, the dispenser of rain, and governor of the weather. He is represented as being assisted by the Maruts or storm-gods in his warfare. Besides the thunderbolt he uses arrows, a large hook, and a net. The Soma juice is his most favourite food, and under its exhilarating influence he performs great achievements (cf. Rv. 10. 119), and pleases his devout worshippers, who are said to invite the god to drink the juice. He is their friend and even their brother; a father, and the most fatherly of fathers; the helper of the poor, and the deliverer and comforter of his servants. He is a wall of defence; his friend is never slain or defeated. He richly rewards his adorers, particularly those who bring him libations of Soma, and he is supplicated for all sorts of temporal blessings, as cows, horses, chariots, health, intelligence, prosperous days, long life, and victory in war. In the Vedas Indra's wife is Indrani, who is invoked among the goddesses.

Such is the Vedic conception of Indra. But in later mythology he falls in the second rank. He is said to be one of the sons of Kasyapa and Dakshayani or Aditi. He is inferior to the triad Brahma, Vishnu and Maheśa (though in some places Vishnu is regarded as his younger brother, cf. R. 14.59, 15.40), but he is the chief of all the other gods, and is commonly styled Suresa, Devendra &c. As in the Vedas so in later mythology, he is the regent of the atmosphere, and of the east quarter, and his world is called Svarga. He sends the lightning, uses the thunderbolt and sends down rain. He is frequently at war with Asuras, whom he constantly dreads, and by whom he is sometimes defeated. The Indra of mythology is famous for his incontinence and adultery, one prominent instance of which is his seduction of Ahalya, wife of Gautama (see Ahalya), and for which he is often spoken of as Ahalya-jara. The curse of the sage impressed upon him a 1000 marks resembling the female organ, and he was therefore called Sayoni; but these marks were afterwards changed into eyes, and he is hence called Netra-yoni and Sahasraksha. In Ramayana Indra is represented as having been defeated and carried off to Lanka by Ravana's son called Meghanada, who for this exploit received the title of 'Indrajit.' It was only at the intercession of Brahma and the gods that Indra was released, and this humiliation was regarded as a punishment for his seduction of Ahalya. He is also represented as being in constant dread of sages practising potent penances, and ascending down nymphs to beguile their minds (see Apsaras). In the Puranas he is said to have destroyed the offspring of Diti in her womb, and to have cut off the wings of mountains when they grew troublesome. Other stories are also told in which Indra was once worsted by Raja, grandson of Pururavas, owing to the curse of Darvasas, and other accounts show that he and Krishna were at war with each other for the Parijata tree which the latter wanted to remove from Svarga, and which he succeeded in doing in spite of Indra's resistance. His wife is Indrani, the daughter of the demon Puloman, and his son is named Jayanta. He is also said to be father of Arjuna. His epithets are numerous, mostly descriptive of his achievements, e. g. वृषहन्, बलभिद्, पाकशासन, गोवभिद्, पुरंदर, शतक्रतु, जिष्णु, नमुचिस्दन &c. (see Ak. I. 1. 44-47). The Heaven of Indra is Svarga; its capital, Amaravati; his garden, Nandana; his elephant, Airāvata; his horse, Uchchaisravas; his bow, the rain-bow and his sword, Paranja. —Comp. —अग्निः the fire produced from the contact of clouds; धूमः frost, snow; देवता the 16th lunar mansion. —अनुजः, —अवरजः an epithet of Vishnu and of Nārāyaṇa. —अरिः an Asura or demon. —अवसानः a desert. —अज्ञानः 1. hemp (dried and chewed). —2. the shrub which bears the seed used in jeweller's weight (युजावृक्ष). —आयुधं Indra's weapon, the rainbow; इन्द्रायुधद्योतिततेरणां R. 7. 4. 12. 79; K. 127. श्चादयो ज्ञेयाः प्रादयस्तुपसर्गकाः । योतकत्वात् क्रियायोगे लोकादवगता इमे ॥ Upasargas are 20 in number:—प्र, परा, अप, सम्, अनु, अव, निम् or निर्, दुस् or दुर्, वि, आ (ह), नि, अधि, अपि, अति, उ, उत्, आभि, प्रति, परि, उप; or 22 if निम्-निर् and दुस्-दुर् be taken as separate words. There are two theories as to the character of these prepositions. According to one theory roots have various meanings in themselves (अनेकार्था हि धातवः); when prepositions are prefixed to them they simply bring to light those meanings already existent but hidden in them, but they do not express them, being meaningless themselves; cf. Si. 10. 15:—संतमेव चिरमप्रकृतत्वादप्रकाशितमदियतदेगे । विभ्रमं मधुमदः प्रमदानां धातुलीनमुपसर्गं इवार्थम् ॥ According to the other theory prepositions express their own independent meanings; they modify, intensify, and sometimes entirely alter, the senses of roots; cf. Sk.:—उपसर्गेण धात्वर्थो बलादन्यत्र नीयते । प्रहाराहारसंहाराविहारपरिहारवत् ॥ cf. also धात्वर्थं वाधते कश्चित्कश्चिन्मनुवर्तते । तमेव विशिनष्टन्य उपसर्गनिबन्धिना ॥ (The latter theory appears to be more correct. Being cursed by Mitra and Varuna she came down to the world of mortals, and became the wife of Pururavas, whom she chanced to see while descending, and who made a very favourable impression upon her mind. She lived with him for some time, and went up to heaven at the expiration of her curse. Pururavas was sorely grieved at her loss, but succeeded in securing her company once more. She bore him a son named Ayus, and then left him for ever.
